Polished Marble

Marble contains natural veins along with color variations as parts of their formation process during millions of years. These characteristics are not considered defects as they enhance the look and the uniqueness of the item. Different marble tops will have distinctive veins, markings and color variations that are unique to each piece. No two pieces are alike.

Marble like any rock is a hard element, though its surface is still porous and might stain from liquids or foods, scratched and chipped, if proper care is not taken.

To protect from acidic substances such as wine, coffee, fruit juice and tomato sauce, and to avoid any ring marks, use coasters or trivets under glasses and dishes; use mats or runners beneath hard objects that may scratch the surface.

Do not place hot items directly on the tabletop.

Do not use chemical cleaners, dusting sprays, abrasive cleaners or furniture polish.

Dust off frequently with a soft and dry cloth.
